With Black Friday 2015 now but a memory, the Christmas shopping season has officially begun. But, as you rush around to find gifts for everyone else, surely you've given at least a moment's thought to your own desires.

So, we wanted to know: "What do you want for Christmas and why?"

YOUR ANSWERS

"A president that doesn't want to create more separation than already exists. That explains itself. Other than that, a nice set of water glasses. Because all we have at the moment are old plastic glasses with the Sheridan school emblem on them. They have to go!" — Susan Louks

"For my kids to have a Christmas, since I am currently in the hospital and will be 'til after Christmas, I can't give them one." — Kayla Stahly

“I really want every season of ‘Smallville’ because I miss that show so much and I never got to see it all.” — Nick Meadows

OUR ANSWERS

“For years I've been asking Santa, praying to God, begging my parents and annoying my grandmother for a Malibu Barbie Dreamhouse. I never got it. After countless rejections and the acceptance of my older age, I've decided to build my own ... dollhouse. Merry Christmas!” — Autumn Ricketts

“Honestly, I haven't given it much thought. I like giving presents more than getting presents. I mostly look forward to hanging out with family and friends during Christmas. But if I have to pick something, I want a LEGO. I know I'm in my 20s, but my inner 5-year-old wants to build a LEGO. Haha! Have a Merry Christmas!” — Katelyn Miller

“I don't really want much for myself. I'm not a super materialistic person, and as long as my family is happy and healthy, I'm good. But, there is this fitted Mitchell & Ness baseball cap with the original 1963 New York Jets logo on it I've had my eye on, but I can only find that on eBay, so I may have to buy that for myself. Beyond that, I'd like some new socks and the soon-to-be-released Tom Tomorrow retrospective '25 Years of Tomorrow,' please.”
